Tsuyoshi Kawasaki specializes in international relations generally and Japanese foreign policy in particular. He is a student of qualitative methods who seeks to combine rigorous hypothesis testing with primary sources including diplomatic archives. His ongoing research projects attempt to bridge Japanese diplomatic history and international relations theory. His additional academic interests include international relations of the Asia-Pacific region (including Japan-Canada/US relations as well as Canada's Asia policy), grand strategy, and international security. His academic and professional activities spread over Japan and Canada (North America). He has published many academic articles and book chapters in English as well as Japanese.

Hosted by:
