

Chinese State-Owned Enterprises: Domestic Governance and Global Expansion

By Dr Wendy Leutert
(Post Doctoral Fellow at Harvard University)

Wendy Leutert (吕丽云) is a Postdoctoral Fellow at the Columbia-Harvard China and the World Program (2018-2019). Her research interests are in comparative and international political economy, with an emphasis on state-business relations and the reform and globalization of China's state-owned enterprises. Her dissertation and first book project examine the impact of leadership in the public sector on economic reform and institutional change in China. At CWP, she will work on a second project titled "The International Origins of China's National Champions," which analyzes how Chinese state-owned enterprises have transformed from state-run factories during the Mao era to today's partially-privatized multinational corporations. In it, she argues that China's national champions have emerged from both domestic experimentation and more than six decades of sustained engagement with international models and actors.
