Prewar Japan's Party Politics from the Perspective of Power Consolidation: Dynamics of the Interplay between "Human Factor" and "Institution"

権力統合からみる近代日本政党政治の特質 —「人」と「制度」をめぐって—

Political power is secured by institutions, but the human factor that operates them is also significant. So, what kind of relationship did the modern Japan's party politics of the 1920s consist of between these two elements? And what happened when the balance was lost? This presentation will clarify the characteristics of the political structure of modern Japan by examining the process of power consolidation from the perspective of the relationship between "person" and "institutions."
