Do Household Incomes and Parents' Expectations Contribute to Money and Time investment in Shadow Education? Evidences from CFPS2016

In 2021, China announced the strictest policy about private education (shadow education) which forbids the commercial activities of the educational institutions that provide related services. This research focuses on the economic reasons that drive families to participate in shadow education. Using an empirical test with China's data, this research suggests the potential dangers of private education, the importance of parents spending time on teaching their children, and the problems of China's current policies.
