

International Symposium

"Transformation of the Security Environment in Northeast Asia and the ROK, Japan, DPRK, and PRC: Future Warfare and Digital Hegemony"

On September 23, 2024 (Monday), Ritsumeikan University's East Asia Peace and Cooperation Research Center, in collaboration with the HK+ National Strategy Research Team of the International Area Studies Center at Hankuk University of Foreign Studies, held an international symposium titled "Transformation of the Security Environment in Northeast Asia and the ROK, Japan, DPRK, and PRC: Future Warfare and Digital Hegemony."

This international symposium was supported by the Consulate General of the Republic of Korea in Osaka. During the symposium, participants summarized the future changes in the security environment of Northeast Asia from the perspectives of various actors and engaged in research exchanges using the analytical frameworks of cognitive warfare and digital hegemony, areas that have recently gained attention. This symposium provided a valuable opportunity for exchanging views between young researchers involved in cognitive warfare and digital hegemony — fields that have only recently started gathering attention — and renowned experts with current and former diplomatic experience.

Moreover, researchers from various countries, including Japan, Korea, Taiwan, and the United States, freely exchanged their views through simultaneous interpretation, making this symposium a meaningful international research exchange in Northeast Asia.

The East Asia Peace and Cooperation Research Center at Ritsumeikan University actively engages in academic exchanges with various research organizations, regardless of language or field.
