Policy Promises and Precarious Realities: Insights from Non-State Actors in the Philippine Creative Industries

This presentation examines the insights of non-state actors into the creative industries of the Philippines to analyze the tensions between policy promises and the lived realities of creative workers. Through interviews and document analysis, this study highlights the critiques of non-state actors regarding government initiatives, their observations of structural gaps, coping strategies, and emerging roles in shaping discourses on welfare and recognition, as well as their potential for sustainable creative futures.
