Research begins with curiosity, a spark of wonder or a question that drives us to explore further. In this lecture, we invite you to embrace challenges, uncertainties, and possibilities, stay open to learning, and adjust your approach as you progress, letting each discovery guide your next step.

Together, we will explore practical strategies to transform initial curiosity into meaningful learning and insights. By adopting the mindset of “feeling for the stones”, we will navigate the river of uncertainty and complexity step by step. We start with the mysterious “stones” of language. By not only using language but also understanding its mechanisms, we can come to see the world in a slightly different way. From there, we move toward deeper concepts such as Intercultural Competence (ICC), global citizenship, Intercultural Collaborative Learning (ICL), interdisciplinary education, and the internationalization of higher education.

Join us on this journey of exploration, reflection, and discovery, where each step opens new possibilities for understanding and contributing to a complex, interconnected world, as well as advancing your own journey in research.
